

December Newsletter

As 2017 comes to an end, the Third Graders are working hard in the classroom.

Writing

The students are working on writing explanatory texts by using facts and details. They will choose a topic to write about. They will be conducting research and gathering information to use in their writing. Students are also learning to incorporate non-fiction text features into their writing. They are so excited to publish their writing pieces!

Reading

Students are investigating non-fiction texts. They are learning lots of new facts by looking for the main idea and using details in the text to support their answers. They are also using non-fiction text features and illustrations to help with their comprehension.

Math

Students are mastering division facts and will continue to practice the strategies being taught in class.

Science

Third Grade scientists have been learning about different forms of matter and measurement. They will soon be learning about forms of energy.

Social Studies

Historians have recently landed in China! They will be exploring the geography, history, government and culture of China.

We wish you and your families a happy and healthy holiday and new year! See you in 2018! 😊
